

Terms of Service

These terms explain what you can expect from us, what we expect from you, and how any engagement between us actually works.

Last updated: 11 September 2026

01 Who this agreement is between

These terms are between you, whether you're browsing our site or engaged us for advisory work, and RISE Ltd, trading as Right Intellectual, a company registered in the Dubai International Financial Centre, United Arab Emirates. Wherever you see "we," "us," or "the firm," that's who we mean. Wherever you see "you," we mean anyone using rightintellectual.com or working with us on a matter.

By visiting the site or asking us to take on a piece of work, you're agreeing to what's written here. If something in here doesn't sit right with you, tell us before you engage us. We'd rather sort it out in conversation than in fine print.

02 What we do

Right Intellectual provides consulting and advisory services related to intellectual property strategy, protection, and commercial use. That might mean guidance on a portfolio, support during a dispute, advice ahead of a transaction, or ongoing counsel as your work evolves. The specifics of any engagement, including scope, deliverables, timeline, and fees, are set out separately in a proposal, statement of work, or signed agreement between us. These general terms sit alongside that document and don't replace it. Where the two disagree, the signed agreement wins.

03 Using the website

You're welcome to browse the site, read what we publish, and get in touch. In return, we ask that you don't try to break it, scrape it at scale, misrepresent who you are when contacting us, or use anything on the site to build a competing service. Nothing on the site should be treated as legal advice specific to your situation. General commentary and published material are exactly that, general, and they're no substitute for a proper conversation about your circumstances.

04 Intellectual property in our content

Everything published on rightintellectual.com, the writing, the layout, the firm's name and marks, belongs to us or to whoever we've licensed it from. You can read it, share a link to it, and quote a short passage with credit. What you can't do is republish it wholesale, pass it off as your own, or use our name or marks to suggest an endorsement that doesn't exist.

Anything you send us in the course of an engagement, and anything we produce specifically for you under a signed agreement, is governed by the ownership terms in that agreement, not by this clause.

05 Fees and payment

Where we've agreed to take on paid work, the fee structure, invoicing schedule, and payment terms will be set out in the relevant proposal or agreement. Unless we've agreed otherwise in writing, invoices are due within thirty days of the date issued, and we reserve the right to pause work on a matter if payment falls significantly behind schedule. We'll always tell you before that happens rather than let it come as a surprise.

06 Confidentiality

Intellectual property work often means handling sensitive material, unpublished inventions, commercial strategy, draft filings, things that matter to your business staying yours. We treat anything you share with us as confidential, and we expect the same courtesy in reverse regarding any non public methods, templates, or advice we share with you. Where an engagement calls for something more formal, we're happy to sign a dedicated confidentiality agreement alongside these terms.

07 No guarantee of outcome

We bring judgment, experience, and care to every matter we take on, but intellectual property outcomes, whether that's a registration, a negotiation, or a dispute, depend on facts, timing, and decisions outside our control, including those made by courts, registries, and other parties. We don't promise a particular result, and nothing in our advice should be read as a guarantee of one. What we do promise is that we'll tell you plainly what we think your chances are and why.

08 Limits on our liability

To the extent permitted under DIFC law, our liability to you arising out of an engagement is limited to the fees paid to us for the specific matter giving rise to the claim, except where liability cannot lawfully be limited, such as in cases of fraud or willful misconduct. We're not liable for indirect or consequential losses, including lost profits or lost opportunities, unless we've specifically agreed otherwise in writing for a particular engagement.

09 Ending an engagement

Either of us can end an engagement in the way described in the relevant signed agreement, typically with reasonable written notice. If no such term was agreed, either party may end the relationship with thirty days' written notice. You remain responsible for fees earned for work completed up to the point the engagement ends.

10 Governing law and disputes

These terms, and any dispute arising from them or from an engagement with us, are governed by the laws applicable in the Dubai International Financial Centre. Any dispute that can't be resolved through direct conversation will be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the DIFC Courts.

11 Changes to these terms

We may update these terms occasionally to reflect how we work or changes in the law. When we do, we'll update the date at the top of this page. If a change materially affects an active engagement, we'll let you know directly rather than leave you to find it here.

12 Get in touch

Questions about any of this are genuinely welcome. Reach us through the contact details published on rightintellectual.com, and we'll get back to you personally rather than through a form letter.
